

Bristol Community College expands hospitality education offerings with non-credit casino dealing course

The job opportunities in the casino industry seem endless. With more than 1,000 casinos in the United States – including two new facilities in Massachusetts, one just over the state line in Tiverton, RI and another in Lincoln, RI.

Bristol Community College anticipates a growing demand for casino dealers in our area in the coming years. To meet this demand, the college has designed a non-credit casino dealing course tailored to meet the growing need and help you land a job as a casino dealer – a job that allows participants to make a good living and thrive in a position that is promising in our region and throughout the country.

Real world preparation

This non-credit dealing course is part of Bristol’s unique Hospitality Management degree program, known for its world-class training in preparing students for real-world job experiences. It’s important to know that all casinos have their own policies and procedures to learn, but our course helps you know how to deal the most popular casino games, helping students to succeed faster.
